WHAT IS SMOKE CONTROL?

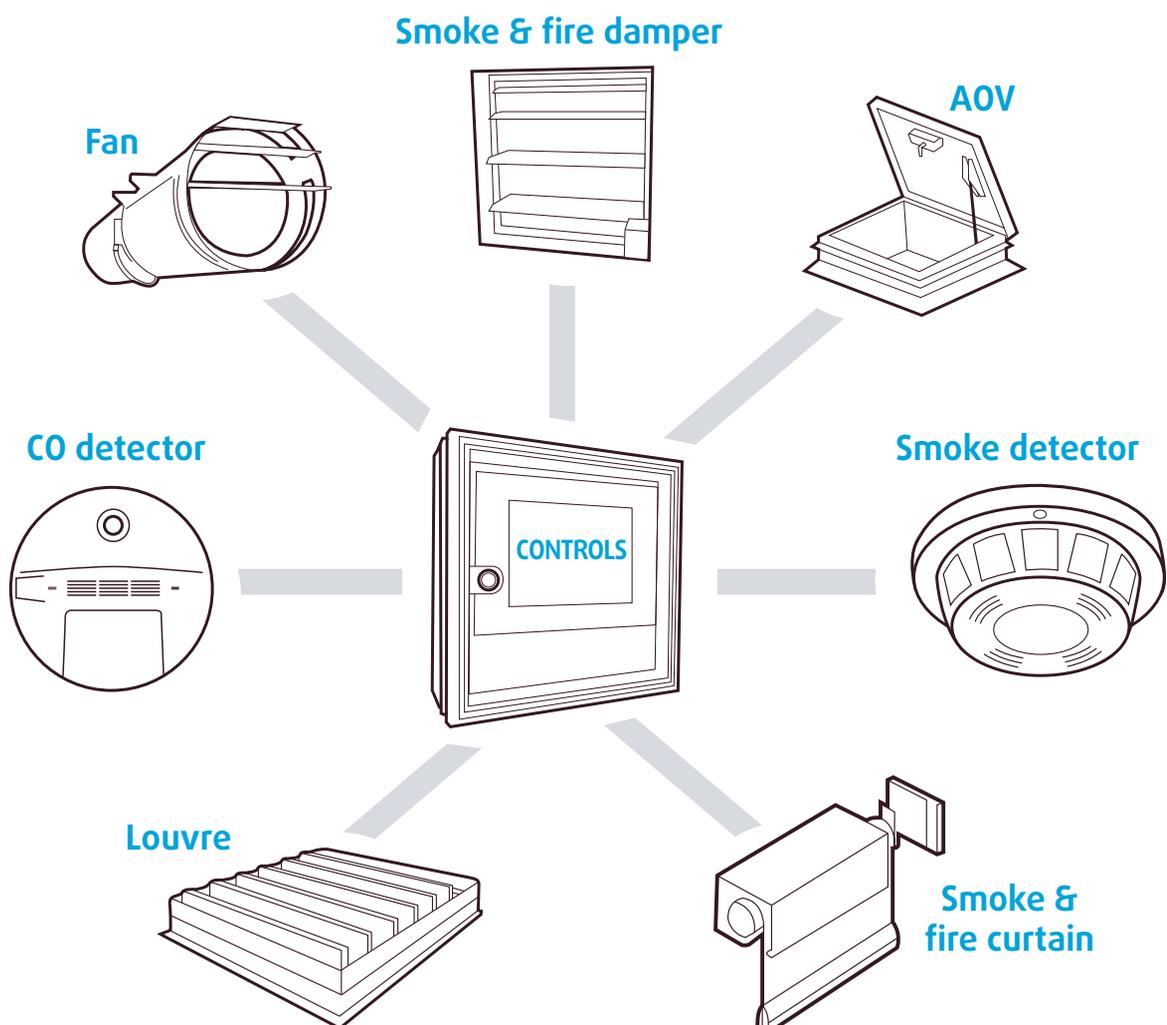

Providing a safe means of escape

In the event of a fire it is crucial that the occupants of any building are able to evacuate quickly and safely.

An effective system for smoke and heat extraction, as well as its containment, is of vital importance when it comes to saving lives and limiting smoke damage to surrounding areas and assets – ensuring clear access to escape routes and much needed visibility for fire fighting services.

Failure to properly maintain a smoke control and fire safety system can prove costly, not only in terms of the potential hazard it causes, but also in terms of regulatory action against those building owners and occupiers who do not take the correct steps - as outlined in the Regulatory Reform (Fire Safety) Order 2005.

As the UK's leading provider of turnkey whole-life service and maintenance for life safety systems, Airvent Services guarantees ongoing regulatory compliance – even for systems installed by its competitors – guaranteeing that your smoke control and fire safety system complies with the latest safety legislation.

Failure of a single element can throw the effectiveness of the whole life safety system into doubt. Airvent engineers don't just know how to maintain or repair single elements; they understand how the elements work together and test systems accordingly.
